

PARENTING EDUCATION

Bullying is a Big Deal

Being bullied or bullying is not just a part of growing up.

Bullying is a repeated physical, psychological or verbal attempt to threaten and scare a victim. It can be done by a single person or several students, and can be against individuals or groups.

Bullying can be direct behaviors such as shoving, tripping, punching, hitting, teasing, taunting, threatening and stealing, which are typically done by boys. It may also be indirect, such as spreading rumors and excluding people, causing them to be isolated from their peers. This method is usually used by girls. Bullying can also involve sending cruel instant or email messages or even posting insults about a person on a website— a practice known as cyber-bullying.

Bullying is Widespread

According to the National Youth Violence Prevention Resource Center: “Almost 30 percent of teens in the United States (or over 5.7 million) are estimated to be involved in bullying as either a bully, a target of bullying or both. In a recent national survey of students in grades 6 to 10, 13 percent reported bullying others, 11 percent reported being the target of bullies, and another 6 percent said they bullied others and were bullied themselves.”

Direct bullying increases through the elementary school years, peaks in the middle school/junior high school years and declines during the high school years. Boys are more likely to engage in bullying behaviors and to be the victims of bullies.

Who Bullies?

Both boys and girls can be bullies. Bullies may be outgoing and aggressive, or bullies can appear detached on the surface, but may try to control people in sneaky, vague ways, like secretly starting a damaging rumor just to see what happens. Many bullies share some common characteristics.

Bullies tend to:

- be impulsive, hot-headed and dominant and are easily frustrated
- have poor social skills and poor social judgement
- think they have the right to push others around, but are actually insecure; they put other people down to make themselves feel more interesting or powerful
- act the way they do because they’ve been hurt by bullies in the past (maybe even a bullying figure in their own family, like a parent or other adult)
- lack the ability to show kindness, concern and caring for others
- have difficulty following rules and view violence in a positive way

If Your Child is a Bully

Talk to him/her and make it clear that you will not allow this kind of behavior, then increase supervision. Set a meaningful non-violent consequence that is age-appropriate.

Ban violent television, including cartoons and violent video games which tend to increase mean behavior. More

Some people think bullying is just part of growing up and a way for young people to learn to stick up for themselves. However, bullying can make young people feel lonely, unhappy and frightened. It makes them feel unsafe. They think there must be something wrong with them. They lose confidence and may not want to go to school anymore.

Why is Bullying Harmful?

1. Children who are bullied often experience low self-esteem and depression.
2. Children who are bullied feel unsafe and frightened.
3. Children who are bullied are more likely to skip school often or drop out altogether.
4. Children who are bullied are socially isolated and unhappy.
5. Children who are bullied either don't report the bullying or wait a long time before reporting it because they are afraid adults cannot or will not protect them.

The Victim

Victims of bullying are generally very unhappy children who suffer from fear, anxiety, depression and low self-esteem—problems that can continue into adulthood. The victim may try to avoid school or social interactions and can even be so troubled that he/she commits or attempts to commit suicide. And even when bullying does not drive victims to the extremes or suicide, they experience major psychological harm, which gets in the way of their social, academic and emotional development. The sooner the bullying stops, the better the long-term outcomes are for the victims.

The Bully

Bullying is often a warning sign that children and teens are heading for trouble and are at risk for serious violence. Teens (particularly boys) who bully are more likely to engage in other antisocial and/or illegal behavior such as vandalism, shoplifting, truancy and drug use into adulthood.

They are four times more likely than non-bullies to be convicted of crimes by age 24, and 60 percent of bullies have at least one criminal conviction.

(Source: National Youth Violence Prevention Resource Center)

What Can Parents Do If Their Child is Being Bullied?

- Ask your child directly. Children don't tell about bullying because they are ashamed and embarrassed or are afraid of the bully getting revenge.
- Work with your school immediately. First go to the teacher to make sure your child is safe, that effective consequences are applied and that there is sufficient monitoring.
- Explain to children the difference between tattling and telling. The secretly of bullying only protects the bully and allows the behavior to continue.

- If your child is shy and lacks friends, try to get him/her involved in positive social groups that meet his/her interest.

- Ask to be notified if your child is involved in a bullying incident— whether the victim or the bully.

- Insist that schools adopt a broad anti-bullying program. This program must involve the entire school, community and parents.

- To really know what goes on in school and to help create a positive atmosphere, volunteer to be a playground supervisor or a classroom assistant.

For more information please contact:
UNIVERSITY OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA
COOPERATIVE EXTENSION SERVICE
Ms. Jaime Brown
Extension Agent
(202) 274-7136
jsbrown@udc.edu
www.udc.edu