

As The University of the District of Columbia considered providing flexible and innovative online learning opportunities for its students, the faculty and the administrative leadership worked collaboratively beginning in 2006 to develop an Intellectual Property Statement. Under charge from the Provost (Fall 2006), a taskforce of 19 members (Taskforce for Online Learning-TFOOL) worked over the duration one academic year to draft an Intellectual Property Statement. This draft served as the basis of the existing proposal contained herein. In addition to the original taskforce who drafted and presented the policy proposal to the Provost, a second committee (Committee For Online Learning (C4OL) continued to pursue Intellectual Property from the fall of 2009 to the Spring of 2013. Faculty members who contributed to the development of the Intellectual Property Statement are listed below. The University leadership team would like to thank and acknowledge the faculty for their work and perseverance over the past seven years as it pertains to Intellectual Property policy development.
